FOR LESSON

Eid and Ramadan in Brooklyn

NARRATOR Faiza Ocasio

ALI What were some of the kinds of ways that Alianza represented Islam as something that was familiar to Puerto Rican culture? How did — how did the celebration or — or, you know, demonstration of Islam in — in Alianza reflect the —

RUN TIME 2:17

OCASIO Okay.

ALI — that culture?

OCASIO We — we would invite people, of course, to Alianza. We would give the khutbah in Spanish and in English, okay, which was not done anywhere. We had bilingual publications, which my husband was the head of. We had — we had dinners in front of the place, or give away food, or we would give away baked goods or sell some baked goods in front. And the Eid celebrations were very much reflecting our culture. And, you know, culture is a multifaceted thing, because you — the — culture’s not just music and the food you eat. Culture’s music, the food you eat, the manner in which you speak, how you treat people, how they treat you. So the — the celebrations, when you went to the Islamic Eid celebrations, they — we would have those things we were familiar with: food and everything. We had the congas, which are the, like, drums, but they’re tall. And we — we had congueros, who played the dru— the drums for us.

KHUTBAH

EID

a Muslim holiday. There are two Eids in the Muslim calendar. Eid al-Fitr marks the end of the month of fasting in Ramadan. Eid al-Adha commemorates the sacrifice of Abraham.

CONGUEROS

a musician who plays the conga drum.

And we had — we even played some of the music. We didn’t try — we didn’t overdo it, but a little of the Puerto Rican music. We had people actually recite poetry. The — I’m trying to think of the — Nuyorican poets. We had some — some stuff from that. And we had the play — we had a play they put together, which made us laugh. And so they really made us feel happy in this time of Eid because we were imbibed with what was familiar to us.

NUYORICAN
